

A home services homepage where the guarantees do the selling

A homepage concept for a fictional Lexington, Kentucky HVAC, plumbing, and electrical company, demonstrating the approach I bring to local service businesses: lead with the promises homeowners actually switch companies over, and make the phone number impossible to lose.

THE DESIGN BRIEF

Limestone Home Services (fictional): a family-run home services company in Lexington, Kentucky, offering HVAC, plumbing, electrical, water heaters, and handyman work. Solid substance — flat-rate book pricing, background-checked techs, a 24/7 emergency line — presented the way most local competitors present it: buried under stock photos of smiling vans.

The challenge given to the design: homeowners don't shop home services by feature list, they shop by fear. Surprise bills, no-show techs, strangers in the house. So the page leads with the three policies that neutralize those fears — the quote is the price, on time or it's free, 90-day warranty — and treats every section as one more reason to call the same number.

/// HVAC • PLUMBING • ELECTRICAL • REPAIRS

Home repairs without the runaround.

Flat-rate quotes before the work starts. Background-checked techs who show up in the window we promised. And if we're late, the service call is free. That's how we've done it in Lexington since 2009.

/// WHY LIMESTONE

Built on the stuff that makes people switch companies.

Every policy below exists because a homeowner told us a story about the last company they used.

01

The price we quote is the price you pay

GUARANTEE

Flat-rate book pricing, shown to you and approved before work begins. If the job turns out harder than we quoted, that's our problem, not your bill.

02

On time, or the visit is free GUARANTEE

Two-hour arrival windows, a text with your tech's name and photo when they're en route, and a waived service fee if we blow the window.

03

Techs you'd let in without a second thought

Every technician is background-checked, drug-screened, and badged. Shoe covers and floor mats on every job, and we haul our own debris.

04

Actually local, actually accountable

Family-run from a shop off Winchester Road since 2009. The owner's cell is on every invoice, and he answers it.

/// HOW IT WORKS

Three steps. No mystery.

01

Call, text, or book online

Tell us what's going on. We'll give you a two-hour arrival window, usually within the week, same day for emergencies.

02

Approve a flat-rate quote

Your tech diagnoses the problem, walks you through options, and shows you the price from the book. Work starts only when you say go.

03

Done, checked, warrantied

We test the fix with you watching, clean up, and back the work for 90 days. You get a follow-up text two days later, just to be sure.

July special: $89 AC tune-up

21-point inspection, coil cleaning, refrigerant check, and a written health report on your system. Keeps most manufacturer warranties valid. Book by July 31.

/// REVIEWS

What your neighbors say.

Pulled from our Google profile. We ask every customer for an honest review, not a five-star one.

"AC died on a Friday in June. They had a tech out Saturday morning, quoted me a flat price before touching anything, and had it running by noon. The text with the tech's photo beforehand is a small thing that matters."

Melissa R.

"Second company I called about a slow drain. First one wanted to 'open the wall and see.' Limestone ran a camera, showed me the clog on the screen, and cleared it for the price they quoted on the phone."

Darnell W.

"Used the half-day handyman for the whole list: two doors, drywall patch, gutter bracket, caulking. One visit, one bill, everything off the fridge list. Booked again for the fall."

DESIGN CONCEPT — FICTIONAL BUSINESS

This page is a design exercise. Limestone Home Services is a fictional company created for portfolio demonstration; the address, phone numbers, license numbers, reviews, and people are fictional, and any resemblance to a real business is coincidental. Page excluded from search indexing.

The full homepage concept: guarantee ticket in the hero, trust strip, six-service grid with entry pricing, a dark "why us" band, three-step process, seasonal offer, neighborhood-anchored reviews, service-area map, and a quote form with a response-time promise.

Four decisions that do the selling

i. Sell the guarantees, not the services

Every competitor lists the same five services. Nobody else promises "on time or the visit is free" in the hero. The guarantees get a dedicated ticket card beside the headline, "Guarantee" tags in the why-us band, and a fine-print line that makes them feel real rather than rhetorical.

ii. A workwear aesthetic that reads blue-collar, not corporate Bricolage Grotesque display type over Libre Franklin, duck-canvas cream, deep navy, blaze orange, hazard-stripe details, and hard offset shadows. It looks like quality work gear — sturdy, honest, a little proud — instead of the interchangeable template sites the category is drowning in.

iii. The phone number never leaves the screen

Utility bar, sticky header, emergency card, call card beside the form, footer, and a fixed call bar on mobile. Home services convert by phone; the quote form is the second path, and it promises a reply within one business hour so it doesn't feel like a black hole.

iv. Local SEO baked into the structure

Neighborhood-anchored reviews (Chevy Chase, Hamburg, Beaumont), a service-area section naming twelve localities, consistent name-address-phone in the footer, and a July-specific seasonal offer. The content structure is the local-search strategy, not a layer added later.

SCOPE

Homepage concept: design system, typography, palette, ten content sections, responsive to mobile with a sticky call bar, working quote-form pattern.

STACK

CONTENT

All copy, branding, pricing, reviews, and business details are original fiction written for this exercise. No real company's content, design, or identity was used.
