

A dark editorial brand for a solo bilingual practice

A homepage concept for a fictional solo work-injury attorney, demonstrating a second, deliberately different design system: dark, atmospheric, and built to turn a firm's philosophy into the page's actual structure.

THE DESIGN BRIEF

Delgado Law (fictional): a solo attorney with twenty years representing injured workers, serving clients in English and Spanish. His core advice to every client — call before the insurer shapes the record, because wages, documentation, and doctor choice get decided early — is exactly the kind of substance that usually dies as a paragraph of body text.

The challenge given to the design: turn that advice into the site's architecture, make bilingual service a first-class feature rather than a banner line, and build trust for a solo practice competing against heavily-advertised firms.

HURT AT WORK? READ THIS BEFORE YOU TALK TO THE INSURER.

The most important call isn't to the insurance company. It's this one.

For more than 20 years, Roanoke attorney Marcos Delgado has helped injured workers get what the system owes them — starting with a free consultation that most people wait too long to make.

WHY TIMING MATTERS

Three things that get decided early — with or without you

By the time many injured workers call a lawyer, the insurer has already shaped the record. An early consultation puts these three levers back in your hands.

01

Your wages get verified

Your benefits are calculated from your average weekly wage. Get that number wrong at the start — overtime missed, second job ignored — and every check that follows is wrong too.

02

Your injury gets documented

What the first medical records say about how you were hurt follows your claim forever. We make sure the record reflects what actually happened — completely and accurately.

03

Your doctor gets chosen

In Virginia, the panel physician decision affects your treatment and your claim. Most workers don't know they have choices here. You should know yours before you commit.

— These three conversations happen in your first free consultation — before the insurer locks in its version of events.

ABOUT MARCOS DELGADO

One attorney. Your case. Twenty years of this exact work.

When you call Delgado Law, you talk to Marcos — not an intake service, not a case manager, not whoever is available.

For over two decades, he has represented injured workers across the Roanoke Valley and Southwest Virginia in workers' compensation and personal injury matters. Clients describe the same things again and again: thorough, honest, aggressive when it counts, and personally invested in the outcome.

SE HABLA ESPAÑOL

Su consulta es gratuita. Su idioma no es un obstáculo.

If English isn't your first language, the workers' compensation system is even harder to navigate — and insurers know it. We handle your entire claim in Spanish or English, from the first conversation to the final resolution.

COMMON QUESTIONS

Answers you should have before you decide anything

Every case is different — these answers are general information, not legal advice. Your free consultation covers your specific situation.

What does it cost to hire a workers' comp lawyer? ×

The consultation is free, and workers' compensation fees in Virginia are contingent and subject to approval by the Workers' Compensation Commission — meaning fees come out of what we recover, not out of your pocket up front.

I already reported my injury. Is it too late to call? +

The insurer offered me a settlement. Should I take it? +

Do you really handle cases in Spanish? +

The full homepage concept: an evergreen editorial system with a "why timing matters" narrative, a dedicated Spanish-language section, and proof arranged to be believed.

Four decisions that do the selling

i.

Turn advice into architecture

The attorney's "call early" philosophy becomes the headline ("The most important call isn't to the insurance company") and a three-step numbered section on wages, documentation, and doctor choice. The firm's thinking becomes the page's structure.

ii.

Bilingual service as a feature, not a footnote

A dedicated Spanish-language section with its own headline, a topbar chip, bilingual form labels, and a navigation entry — because for the clients who need it, it's the deciding factor.

iii.

Atmosphere as differentiation

Where most injury firms shout in red and gold, this system is quiet: deep evergreen ground, brass accents, ivory serif headlines. In a category full of noise, calm reads as confidence.

iv.

Proof over promises

A stat strip under the hero, credential panel, review cards, and a no-JavaScript FAQ that answers the questions people actually hesitate over — cost, timing, settlements — before they call.

SCOPE

Homepage concept: design system, typography, palette, nine content sections including a no-JavaScript FAQ accordion, responsive to mobile.

STACK

Hand-coded HTML/CSS with vanilla JS enhancements — the same lightweight approach I bring to custom Gutenberg/ACF WordPress themes.

CONTENT

All copy, branding, business details, and reviews are original fiction written for this exercise. No real firm's content, design, or identity was used.

DESIGN CONCEPT — FICTIONAL BUSINESS

This case study is a self-initiated design exercise. Delgado Law is a fictional firm created for portfolio demonstration; any resemblance to a real business is coincidental.
